Explanation of Risk

■ Explanation on Market Risk

Market risk is the possibility that the value of securities in which the mutual fund invests may increase or decrease due to external factors such as investment climate, domestic and foreign politics. This is measured in terms of standard deviation (SD) of the mutual fund. If the SD is high, the Fund is likely to experience fluctuate in prices of securities.

■ Explanation on Currency Risk

Currency Risk is the possibility that changes in exchange rate will affect the value of investment units. For example, if a mutual fund invests in securities denominated in US Dollar during Thai Baht depreciation and the units are subsequently sold when Thai Baht appreciates, the mutual fund will receive lower return in Thai Baht. On the other hand, if the same fund invests in securities denominated in US Dollar during Thai Baht appreciation and the units are subsequently sold when Thai Baht depreciates, the mutual fund will receive higher return in Thai Baht. Therefore, currency hedging techniques as follows are key tools to manage such risk.

Fully-hedged: Investors have no exposure to currency risk.

Partially-hedged with fixed ratio: Investors may be exposed to certain level of currency risk.

Hedging at discretion of the fund manager: Investors may be exposed to currency risk because it is the discretion of the fund manager whether to use a currency hedging technique.

No hedging: Investors will experience currency risk.

■ Explanation on High Concentration Risk

(1) High Issuer Concentration Risk arising from the Fund investing in a single issuer of securities more than 10% of the total NAV. If there is any circumstance that adversely affects the performance, financial status, or stability of such issuer, the Fund may encounter higher volatility in performance than funds that diversify their investment among many issuers.

(2) Sector Concentration Risk arising from the Fund investing in a single sector more than 20% of the total NAV. If there is any circumstance that adversely affects such industry, the Fund may encounter higher volatility in performance than funds that diversify their investment among many sectors.

(3) Country Concentration Risk arising from the Fund investing in a single country more than 20% of the total NAV. If there is any circumstance that adversely affects such country, e.g., political, economic, or social developments, etc., the Fund may encounter higher volatility in performance than funds that diversify their investment among many countries.
